We asked participants in our national housing decision-making study about how important being included in the community is to them. The study included 726 people with intellectual and/or developmental disabilities (I/DD) and family members. Here’s what we found!

COMMUNITY IS VERY IMPORTANT TO PEOPLE
People with I/DD said being part of the community was very important to them. Having time in the community was one of the favorite things people with I/DD said about where they lived. However, people did not always have real community inclusion in their current home:

• People described the community as a place they “went to” or “visited,” not a place they belonged.
• Sometimes, people were not allowed to choose where they went in the community.
• Sometimes, people had to go everywhere as a group.

People with I/DD have the right to real community inclusion. Community is not just a place someone goes to, but “a place people have a stake in, a place people feel they belong.”

HOW WE CAN HELP PEOPLE BE MORE INCLUDED IN THE COMMUNITY
• Increase funding to promote quality, community-based housing services.
• Work with community members to create more adequate, accessible, and integrated housing options for people with I/DD.
• Make it easier for people with I/DD to receive services and supports in their own homes, in family homes, and in shared living settings.
• Make community-based supports more available to people with higher support needs and people with both I/DD and mental health disabilities.
• Increase wages and training for direct support staff to help address turnover.
• Make sure services and supports are person-centered and directed by what that person wants.
• Empower people with I/DD to exercise their rights. Work with people with I/DD to stop any rights violations that are occurring.
• Recognize that people with I/DD are the experts about their own lives and that their choices must be treated with respect.
